Delaware County Literacy Council Welcomes Education and Community Leader Adriene Irving to Board of Directors

DELAWARE COUNTY, PA — The Delaware County Literacy Council (DCLC) announced today that Adriene Irving, Director of Legislative and Communications Services for the Delaware County Intermediate Unit (DCIU), has joined its Board of Directors.

"Adriene Irving's extensive experience in education policy and her deep commitment to community service make her an invaluable addition to our Board," said Rick Durante, President of the DCLC Board of Directors. "Her understanding of both legislative matters and local community needs will help strengthen our mission of promoting adult literacy throughout Delaware County."

Irving brings over 15 years of experience in education policy and communications to the Council. In her current role at DCIU, she tracks education legislation affecting the Commonwealth while managing organizational communications and maintaining relationships with legislators, school administrators, and community organizations.

"I believe that everyone in Delaware County should have equal access to a quality education," said Irving. "If I can help, if only in a small way, by working with the Delaware County Literacy Council, I am excited and happy to do so."

Born and raised in Chester, Irving's commitment to community service spans decades. Her previous roles include Director of Communications for the City of Chester and Vice President of Community Affairs at the Delaware County Chamber of Commerce, where she strengthened the Chamber's presence in Chester and built lasting relationships with business leaders and elected officials.

A Chester High School graduate, Irving holds a bachelor's degree in Public Relations and a Master of Science in Organizational Communications from Shippensburg University. She currently resides in Thornton, PA.

About Delaware County Literacy Council (DCLC): For almost 50 years, the Delaware County Literacy Council has helped adults develop reading, writing, math, and English Language skills to help them thrive in the workplace and the community.
